Engineering Society of Detroit Honors Jeff Naber

Jeff Naber, associate professor of mechanical engineering-engineering mechanics and director of the Advanced Power Systems Research Center, is one of three engineers honored with a 2010 distinguished service award by the Engineering Society of Detroit (ESD). The award was presented at the ESD's annual dinner in Detroit June 23.

Naber was recognized for "loyal, faithful service," said Darlene Trudell, executive vice president, "and for this we are truly grateful."

Naber has led a successful collaboration between Michigan Tech and the ESD to teach a course in Detroit in advanced hybrid electric propulsion technology for graduate and displaced engineers.

Colorado College to Replace Boston University at GLI

Athletic Director Suzanne Sanregret has announced that Colorado College will replace Boston University as the invited team at this year's Great Lakes Invitational (GLI), Dec. 29-30, at Joe Louis Arena.

The change is the result of a scheduling oversight made by Boston University.

"We would like to welcome and thank Colorado College for committing to the GLI on such short notice," said Sanregret. "They will be a great addition to the tournament."

This year will mark the third appearance for Colorado College at the GLI. The Tigers finished fourth in the inaugural tournament in 1965 and claimed the title in 2005.

Michigan and Michigan Tech will play the first game on Dec. 29, followed by the Michigan State and Colorado College game. The following day's action will include a third-place game followed by the championship game.
