OBESITY GENOMICS AND GENETICS: Genes influencing human obesity found in chromosome region 7q22.1-7q35

Genes influencing human obesity were found in chromosome region 7q22.1-7q35.

According to a study from the United States, "Linkage results suggest that the region of chromosome 7 containing the leptin gene cosegregates with extreme obesity; however, leptin coding region mutations are rare. To investigate whether the leptin flanking sequence and/or a larger 40-cM region (7q22.1-7q35) contributes to obesity, we genotyped individuals from 200 European American families segregating extreme obesity and normal weight (1020 subjects) using 21 microsatellite markers and two single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) and conducted nonparametric linkage (NPL) analyses."

"We also carried out transmission disequilibrium tests for 135 European American triads using 27 markers (including eight SNPs)," reported Wei-Dong Li and collaborators at the University of Pennsylvania, Yale University, and Michigan Technological University. "Both quantitative (MERLIN-regress) and qualitative (GENE-HUNTER and MERLIN-npl) analyses provided evidence for linkage for BMI (GENEHUNTER NPL=2.98, 20 cM centromeric to leptin at the marker D7S692; MERLIN Z score=3.56). Results for several other regions in 7q gave weak linkage. Transmission disequilibrium test (TDT) and quantitative TDT (and quantitative pedigree disequilibrium test) analyses suggest linkage disequilibrium near leptin and other regions of 7q."

"Our results suggested that there could be two or more genes in chromosome region 7q22.1-7q35 that influence obesity," concluded Li and coauthors. "A new region found by this study (D7S692-D7S523, 7q31.1) has the most consistent linkage results and could harbor obesity-related genes."

Li and associates published their study in Diabetes (Linkage and linkage disequilibrium mapping of genes influencing human obesity in chromosome region 7q22.1-7q35. Diabetes, 2003;52(6):1557-1561). Students face swapping rules

Jefferson Graham

When students arrive in New Haven, Conn., next month for their freshman orientation at Yale, they'll hear about more than academics and campus life.

After four college students were sued last spring by the record industry for online song swapping and a flurry of subpoenas recently sent to universities and Internet providers to identify more swappers, "we have new language in our undergraduate regulations and are planning an added emphasis on this topic," says Yale general counsel Dorothy Kathryn Robinson.

Students at Princeton, Michigan Tech and Rensselaer settled in the spring with the Recording Industry Association of America with fines from $12,000 to $17,500. The RIAA plans to launch "hundreds" more suits in early September, in an unprecedented attack on individual users intended to stem the profligate piracy that has contributed to an 8.3% drop in sales in the past year.

"I liken it to going from a bubble-gum machine to a fully stocked candy store," says Sheldon Steinbach, vice president of the American Council on Education, a trade group that represents 1,800 universities on legislative issues.

This year's orientations "will be night and day" compared with last year's, Steinbach says, in terms of tough talk about unauthorized downloading and how it violates conduct codes, the potential loss of Net use for violators and other school penalties, as well as thousands of dollars in fines.

Steinbach concedes that having any of this sink in is an uphill battle.

"Students live in their own world," he says. "They have this perception of non-vulnerability. . . . Until it happens to them, they won't believe it."

Kazaa, the most popular free swap service, counts more than 250 million users worldwide. Legitimate alternatives such as Pressplay and MusicNet have fewer than 300,000 combined.

"The numbers are too enormous for this kind of tactic to have any kind of immediate effect," says University of Southern California professor Douglas Thomas, who teaches about technology and media issues.

Graham Spanier, president of Penn State University, has been pushing for a "music technology" fee to be built into the costs of attending college. "There's clearly a market for music at the college level," says Rick Mickool, executive director for information services at Northeastern University.

Mickool's department recently received a subpoena seeking the identity of a student, as did Boston University, Boston College, MIT, Bentley, Loyola and DePaul. Not all complied with the subpoenas. Northeastern did.

In 1999, 18-year-old Northeastern student Shawn Fanning invented Napster, which kicked off the online music-sharing revolution, in his dorm room. Now, so much of the university's bandwidth is used for song swapping that the school instituted "traffic shaping" technology to give precedence to classroom online activities.

American Indian lore says the North and South Manitou islands in Lake Michigan symbolize two bear cubs that died while crossing the lake with their mother.

But for environmentalists, the two islands have come to represent how humans can disrupt the ecological balance of America's forests.

"Man's legacy is still felt on the islands' ecosystems," Michigan Technological University biologist David Flaspohler told the Traverse City Record-Eagle for a recent story. "I can guarantee they don't look anything like they used to."

Flaspohler and National Park Service officials say the key problem confronting the islands now is the deer that people brought with them to North Manitou in 1926.

The effect of the deer that were introduced to the island for a private hunting preserve has been so pronounced that the U.S. Forest Service has commissioned a three-year, $197,000 study of the issue.

In short, the vegetation eaten by the deer is the same vegetation that supports a variety of bird species such as the black-throated blue warbler and the ground-nesting ovenbird.

For officials managing the Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore to which the island belong, the changes pose a daunting challenge.

"We are trying to maintain our natural environment as unimpaired as possible," said Steve Yancho, the park resource manager.

Yancho and other officials say they worry that the islands are following diverging ecological paths.

The Canadian yew, which covers the forest floor on South Manitou, is almost extinct on North Manitou. Similarly, the cedars that fill the southern island are conspicuously absent on the northern island.

The warbler and ovenbird "are the ones we think are being most affected because they live in the area most often eaten by the deer," said Flaspohler.

Environmental officials have been working to keep the deer population down. While the deer population once reached a high of 2,000, they are now fewer than 200 as a result of controlled hunting. That has allowed the regrowth of much of the underbrush that deer had picked clean.

But Flaspohler said he fears that may not be enough and that the deer may have to be removed altogether.
The move is unpopular with hunters.

"I like hunting out there and a lot of guys would really pitch a fit," said Scott Lammers, a hunter.

Another hunter, Wyman Friske, says officials should not remove any of the islands' plants or deer.

"White-tailed deer are native to Michigan, Leelanau County," he said. "And I'd say they are native to North Manitou because they've been there so long."

DIGGERS FOURTH AT SASKATOON

The Grande Prairie Bantam Diggers placed fourth at the 2003 Western Canadian Fastpitch Championships in Saskatoon over the weekend.

The Diggers finished 3-3 in the round-robin, but were stopped cold by the Prince Albert Astros 4-0 Saturday.

The Diggers got the tournament off on a winning note Thursday morning with a close 5-4 victory over the host Saskatoon Phantoms in which Scott Laderoute went the distance on the hill, fanning 11 Phantom batters to post the win.

The Digger's record dipped to 1-1 Thursday afternoon as the eventual champion Nanaimo Black Diamonds scored a 2-0 victory.

Grande Prairie fell to 1-2 to round out the opening day's play in a close 4-3 loss to the Astros.

Digger Andrew Hawkes went two-for-three in the loss.

Grande Prairie came gunning back with a vengeance on Friday against the Sooke Salmon and Marwayne Mariners with 8-1 and 10-0 wins respectively, both in five innings.

Hawkes was a perfect three-for-three in the Salmon victory, while teammate Scott Rotenburger was two-for-two.

Jeff McVey was two-for-three against Sooke and scored three runs. Laderoute took the win.

McVey was two-for-two against the Mariners while Laderoute went two-for-three and added another victory to his credit.

Hawkes and Jonathan Boyle scored two runs each against Marwayne.

The Diggers wrapped up their round-robin at an even .500 after another close loss, a 1-0 decision to the Winkler Silver Stars Saturday morning.

Although only allowing three hits in six innings, Laderoute took the loss for the Diggers.

The Astros advanced to the final, but were nipped in a close 2-1 tilt by the Black Diamonds.

Area tennis players hit the court Monday

By JIM WHYMER
Times Herald

Two female divisions have returned to the Robinson tennis tournament thanks to a group of young ladies and women.

Those players will hit the court Wednesday for Ladies Day in the 46th annual Francis J. Robinson Memorial International Tennis Tournament, which begins Monday morning at Sanborn Park courts.

Both the Girls 10-and-under and Women's 45 Singles divisions have been a part of the week-long event over the years, but not last summer according to Barb Lynch, the Robinson director.

"We had young girls play last year, but just not enough for a 10-and-under division," Lynch said. "Dean (Sousanis, Almont coach) sent a lot of players for that division.

"The Women's 45 Singles is making a comeback. That's good to see.

"A lot of ladies play in leagues during the winter, but are terrified to play in a tournament. The Team Tennis program might be helping. Now they are not intimidated."

Another big division in the tournament, which attracts players from around the Blue Water Area and Sarnia, is girls 16-and-under.

In addition to singles, individuals can play doubles and mixed doubles in the tournament.

A single-elimination format is used for the main draws in both junior and adult divisions. A consolation backdraw will be played for boys and girls singles.

Semifinals are scheduled for Saturday with finals being played Sunday at Sanborn Park.

Lynch, who was a three-event winner for years, is making a comeback of sorts.

After playing just Open Mixed Doubles for a number of years, the former University of Michigan player is competing in women's doubles with Laura Matzka, who played at Michigan Tech.

Lynch and Steve Pillon are the defending champions in the Mixed Open Doubles.

Pillon will try to defend his Open Singles crown and win the Open Doubles title with Jason Go.

The men's 35 singles division is wide open as the four semifinalists from a year ago are not competing.

Glenn Johnson, who injured his knee in the Kromer Flight Doubles tournament, is not playing singles for the first time in a number of years. He is scheduled to play Men's 35 Doubles with Steve McCalmon and Open Mixed Doubles with Ann Mary Grant.

"There's only so much you can do," Johnson said. "I've been busy at work and have been teaching probably 3 or 4 hours a week.

"As long as I can walk, I play at least one event. I'll try to keep up with Art Smith (45 Robinson appearances).

"The strong players around right now are Jason (Go), Steve (Pillon), Chris (Rossow) and Marko (Walker)."

Johnson plans to watch his two sons - Greg and Phil - play in the tournament. Each player is competing in three events.

Greg is a junior on the Port Huron Northern tennis team and Phil is a ninth-grader.

"There is so much tradition with this tournament," Johnson said. "It's a big part of my life. I enjoy being at the courts and seeing players I've taught and know.

"It's a lot of fun. It's like family week."
Lynch is pleased with the amount of quality players in each division.

"Our numbers are up a little bit in some divisions," Lynch said. "The boys Under-10 is down, but the rest of the boys divisions are stable.

"Every one of the divisions are solid. We keep looking at some of the second-round matches and say how good they are."

Jones, area stars get final fling
All-star game today will cap prep careers for Trojan, 6 others

By Mike Kohon
For the Lansing State Journal

EAST LANSING - Preston Jones went against his allegiance to Ohio State to go to Arizona State.

Jones, an East Lansing graduate, will be a walk-on running back for the Sun Devils in the fall.

He will also play for the West in the Michigan High School All-Star Football Game at 2 p.m. on Saturday at Spartan Stadium.

Jones will play alongside six other area players in the game, which will not include any Michigan State freshmen.

After other schools, including Florida, showed interest in 5-8, 170-pound Jones, he narrowed his college choices to Ohio State and the Sun Devils.

"I loved Ohio State all my life," Jones said, "but then I started getting letters from Arizona State.

"I visited both schools and liked ASU. It wasn't any reason in particular, but they're already a program on the rise."

During his senior season, Jones compiled 1,411 yards and 14 touchdowns en route to earning his team's Most Valuable Player honors. He also made 51 tackles and two interceptions as a linebacker. "He has great moves," East Lansing coach Jeff Smith said. "He's tough, strong and can break tackles, too."

ESPN.com's Ivan Maisel put Arizona State at No. 13 in his preseason rankings.

Although Jones is not certain what his role will be with the Sun Devils, he hopes to help the team live up to Maisel's ranking.

"I couldn't really care what they want me to do," Jones said. "I'll do whatever they ask. I love the game and want to help."

Jones feels the same way about the all-star game.

"I'm coming in and thinking I'll have a good experience," he said. "I hope to learn more about the game, and I want to play well."

Since Sunday, the players have attended a pre-game camp, which Jones has used to learn and relax.

"I'm having fun and getting to know a lot of the other guys here," he said. "I just think that the game will be another great experience for me before I leave for school."

Seeking that extra edge
Trek finds it in carbon fiber

CATHARINE NANGINI
cnangini@journalsentinel.com

Lance Armstrong is pitting strength, endurance and will-power against rival Jan Ullrich in a bid for a fifth consecutive win in the Tour de France. But beneath the battle of the cyclists is the battle of bike-frame technology.

Armstrong rides a carbon-fiber bike designed and built by Waterloo-based Trek Bicycle Corp. Ullrich is banking on Bianchi's Italian-made aluminum alloy frame. Both materials are super light, but that's about all they have in common.

Weight is the driving force behind bike design, which led to high-end carbon fiber and new aluminum alloys.

"They're all very similar frame weights," said Glenn Daehn, professor of materials science and engineering at Ohio State University, but each has its own unique response.

"In a bike frame you need something that's pretty stiff," said Bruce Pletka, professor of materials science and engineering at Michigan Technological University in Houghton. But what really matters is toughness, strength and how many times a material can withstand small stresses before failing, he said.

Aluminum has a reputation for being stiff, which can be hard on the rider over long distances because it doesn't absorb shock very well, Daehn said. But too much springiness in a frame makes the bike less efficient for the rider.

A carbon-fiber frame is stiffer than aluminum but can better absorb the vibrations of the road, said Steve Swenson, a technician at Trek. "It transmits vibration less harshly than aluminum," which translates into a more comfortable ride.

More riders are choosing to enter the Tour de France with carbon-fiber bikes than ever before, said Jim Colegrove, a manufacturing engineer of composites at Trek. Aluminum, though, still remains a popular favorite.

For non-professional riders, evaluating a bike frame involves many factors. Some are technical, and some purely subjective, such as ride quality and feel.

And some are purely financial. A carbon-fiber bike can cost almost 1 1/2 times as much as an aluminum bike with the same components, Swenson said.

For elite cyclists, however, it's all about weight and performance -- as well as personal preference.

Armstrong has turned out to be the perfect experimenter for Trek. When he wants a new bike or has an idea about a new bike, Trek ends up building one the public can buy at the store, Swenson said.

Long road to composites

Bikes have come a long way from the wooden "bone shakers" of the mid-nineteenth century. In 1870, new metallurgy made possible the first all-metal bicycle, known as the high wheel, which tipped riders headfirst when the bike's large front wheel stopped unexpectedly. Developments a couple of decades later produced the familiar parts that endure today, such as chains and gears.

Tour de France bikes have changed radically in the race's 100 years. In the early 1980s, the era of light bikes began, starting with aluminum models. Aluminum is a handy material of choice, being the most abundant metal in the Earth's crust.

At first glance, carbon fibers -- about five times thinner than a human hair -- seem unlikely candidates to withstand the grueling demands of the world's best cyclists. "For its weight, it's about the strongest material you can find," said George Sines, professor of materials science and engineering at the University of California-Los Angeles.
"Carbon fiber comes to us in a sheet-like form," said Trek's Colegrove, so areas of the bike that need more strength can be given more layers, for example. "That is some of the beauty of carbon fiber," he said.

Aluminum bikes can be strengthened by a combination of the right alloys and shape, with wide tubes for stiffness that are thicker near joints and thinner in the middle where stresses are weaker.

"Pure aluminum you can bend in your hand," Pletka said, so zinc or magnesium often is mixed in.

Ullrich, the 1997 Tour de France champion, is probably not worrying about the strength of his Bianchi frame as he plans his race strategy, nor should he.

One square millimeter of aluminum wire can suspend 40 kilograms, said Stefano Locatelli, an engineer with Dedacciai in Italy, which supplies Bianchi. That's like supporting a 12-year-old boy on a wire as thick as the tip of a ballpoint pen. "It means that this aluminum is better than some steel."

What materials will go into the future Tour de France bikes? No one really knows. "It's constantly evolving," said Marc Muller, design engineer for Waterford Precision Cycles in Wisconsin. "That's what's fun."
LOCAL FOOTBALL: Fantetti bids goodbye to Ravens
Brennan grad accepts scholarship to Michigan Tech University

Walking away from the Essex Ravens was the hardest part for Steve Fantetti.

The Brennan grad played his final game for the Ravens in last week's loss to London.

"I wasn't even supposed to play in that game," the 18-year-old Fantetti said.

That's because Fantetti has accepted a scholarship offer from Michigan Tech University where he'll join former Ravens teammate Chad Santos.

"When Chad got recruited, their coach called and asked (Ravens head coach Glen) Mills about defensive backs," Fantetti said. "They asked for a tape and then recruited me."

The deal is for $23,000 US per season except for a $4,000 out-of-state student fee he'll pay his first year.

"It was because of the Ravens I got this (scholarship), because in high school I was a quarterback," Fantetti said.

Ravens finish

The Ravens will be looking for a win and a little help tonight at Raider Field.

The Ravens (5-2) face the Cambridge Lions (0-7) in the regular season finale in Essex.

Game time is 7 p.m. and it's CAW night, meaning all members and their kids will be admitted free.

A win by the Ravens and a London win over Halton will give Essex second place in the division and a first round home playoff game next week.

Veteran quarterback Kevin Gallagher gets the start tonight, looking to regain the form that helped him lead the team to last year's Ontario Varsity Football League title.

"The big thing is to get our passing game going," Mills said.

"We haven't been successful since the (fourth game) against Guelph."

"Kevin will start and he's looked good in practice."

"We just want him to play within himself and do what he does well," he said.

Mills also wants his team to work on the mental part of the game.

"We made four mental mistakes last week and it resulted in four touchdowns," Mills said.

"We spent a lot of time this week just simplifying things and going over with guys why we do things a certain way."

Graduating class

The Ravens will honour their graduating players during tonight's game.

"We'll call each of them out and announce how many years they've been here," Mills said.

"At our banquet, we'll give each of them a helmet with their number on it."

Gallagher, linebacker A.J. Petz, safety Jamie Hennessey, slot back Scott Sprague, offensive lineman Gary Strong, defensive back Andrew Sulyok, linebacker Will Ford, offensive lineman Giulio Caldarelli, defensive lineman Bruno Cacihlas and linebacker Sam Madia will each be playing their last regular-season game tonight.
AT THE RACES: Outdoor spirit moves Kramer

Windsor Star
Bob Duff, Sports Columnist

His major was chemical engineering but deep down, Brad Kramer knew where the true chemistry of his life's work was set.

So he traded in his Bunson burners for the backstretch of a racetrack.

"I went to college to study chemical engineering at Michigan Tech and quit that and started mucking stalls for a horseman," Kramer said.

"I didn't like school that much, even though it came pretty easily to me.

"I'm an outdoor person and the horses suited me perfectly. And you know, I kind of loved it."

It turned out that Kramer's true love was also his true calling.

Last year, he was presented with the Dan Rathka Memorial Award as Michigan's horseman of the year.

"That was the greatest, the top thing you can get," Kramer said.

"It's voted by the horsemen, so it's quite a honour.

"I had a really good year, but still, I didn't think I'd get it."

Kramer, 45, who transports his skills back and forth across the Canada-U.S. border between several Michigan tracks and Windsor Raceway, grew up just 10 minutes from Sports Creek Raceway in Swartz Creek, Mich., but had no horse-racing background in his family when he decided to enter the business, mostly because he needed some cash.

"I worked at a horse farm on the weekends in high school and I just went back there to get a job when I quit college," he said.

Kramer started out working for trainer Bill Deeters and eventually found his way to The Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J., where he worked for the Ackerman family and for Leroy Copeland.

Branching out on his own, Kramer let others drive his horses for several years before deciding to give the sulky a go of his own.

"I didn't start driving until I was 30," Kramer said.

"I'd trained for quite a few years before that and when I came back to Michigan with Leroy Copeland, that's when I started driving.

"One good thing about it -- after training for so many years, I got to drive pretty good horses right away."

Despite the late start, Kramer has averaged .360 or better in each of his last five years as a driver and he's closing in on 4,000 career victories.

Kramer drove and trained two of the best rookies in his home state during 2002.

Tyke Kandu earned $156,527 en route to being named Michigan's top two-year-old colt trotter.

Benn's Riverdance, a horse Kramer also co-owns, captured the state's honour as leading two-year-old filly trotter after earning $166,637.

He's driven five state champions since 2000, not bad for a guy who never set out to enter the sport in the first place.

"I didn't really think I'd get hooked on this business, but it's turned out pretty good," Kramer said.

"I tried to get out of it a few times, but once you're hooked, it's pretty hard to get it out of your blood."

Down the stretch Ontario Sires Stakes Gold Series action returns to Windsor Raceway this week. Eliminations for the two-year-old colt trotters go Sunday, with eliminations for the two-year-old filly pacers slated for Wednesday . . . Sunday is also family fun day at Windsor, featuring a scheduled appearance by Peanut, the world's smallest horse.
A Marquette County bridge that was washed out as a result of the Dead River's flooding in May will be open to traffic this fall, the Marquette County Road Commission said.

Plans for the new bridge to replace the County Road AAO bridge will be reviewed by the Michigan Department of Transportation next week and bids will be solicited Aug. 8, the commission's assistant engineering director, Kurt Taavola, told The Mining Journal for a Friday story.

A tentative bid award date has been set for Sept. 10 and construction is expected to begin Sept. 15.

"We're going to make sure that by this fall, it's open to traffic, but we'll give the contractor until next June to finish up little things," said Taavola.

The Critical Bridge Program, administered by the Federal Highway Administration, will fund 95 percent of the construction costs for the new bridge. The project is expected to cost $426,000, plus the cost of the concrete box beams for which a bid award is expected next week.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich. (AP) - The 17th Annual DeTour Area Chamber of Commerce SalmonFest was to begin Saturday.

The competition marks the season's first salmon derby. A $1,000 top prize and rumors of fish running hot are expected to keep the competition fierce. Salmon fisherman have two different derby opportunities at both ends of the St. Mary River.

"Due to the colder weather, the salmon have been running shallow 30-35 feet on green and silver," Russ Livingston of North Country Sports told The Evening News for a Friday story.

Livingston says salmon anglers have a range of options when searching for a winning combination. Some of the better lures include the MonkeyPuke and Kevorkian varieties. Other anglers have been successful with the silver-hammered Yellowtail and another dubbed "The Hoochie Mama."

North Country Sports in DeTour will serve as the tournament's mainland headquarters while Fort Drummond Marine will provide a weigh station on Drummond Island.

The weeklong competition will end Aug. 2.

HANCOCK, Mich. (AP) - The Local Development Finance Authority Board, the financial arm of the Michigan Tech EnterPrise SmarIZone, has approved a preliminary layout for its $700,000 Hancock business incubator.
The fourth floor of the former Portage hospital in Hancock will be the city's second business incubator, and bids will likely be sought for the project in about a month.

"We're very optimistic that things will be progressing very rapidly in the future," Jim Martin, Hancock's mayor and finance authority board member, told The Daily Mining Gazette for a Friday story.

Finance authority chairman Bill Blumhardt, Houghton's mayor pro tem, said the Hancock project could be ready for bidding by the end of August. The renovation project will cost about $400,000.

The 12,750 square feet of leasable space in the Hancock facility is divided into three wings, with the offices in the south wing to be used as suites or laboratories. The west wing will be an open space and the north wing will be a combination of offices and open work spaces.

"We have pretty flexible space so it should accommodate most users, one way or another," said John Kirk, project engineer from U.P. Engineers & Architects.

The first incubator was the old Houghton powerhouse which opened in June.
Put people before material goods, club told

DAVID NEALE

"Never hesitate to hold out your hand; never hesitate to accept the outstretched hand of another."

- Pope John XXIII

"People, and their welfare, are the only transcendent values in life," concluded Earl Pitts, the guest speaker at the Kiwanis Club of Cambridge.

Club member Steve Garrison introduced Mr. Pitts who has just published a book titled Wealth, Richs & Money. Earl graduated from the University of Toronto in electrical engineering and went to work for IBM in Toronto, rising to global responsibility for product manufacturing. He was born in Brantford and is married to Dorothy with whom he shares two children. Steve first met Earl at a meeting of Youth With A Mission, and later found him again at Qoinonia Fellowship meetings. Earl has travelled extensively and brings a world perspective to his concerns.

He began his speech by referring to people’s attachment to the Land of Never Enough through the medium of debt. He noticed that production was oriented around creating and shipping more goods only to see them come back for recycling several years later. This led him to question what were the values in life that were paramount. His answer was that people and their welfare were the only transcendent values in life. This led him and his wife to join Youth With A Mission, to try to prepare youth so that they could be an asset to society. Earl taught finance to youth and wanted to bring them to understand that wealth was something that could be transferred from one generation to the next. Debt by itself does not create wealth, as the debt must be repaid with interest, in gradually depreciating currency. Wealth is intrinsic value that can be transferred over the years. He has brought his message of financial well being and Christian values to people in Kiev as well as many other countries of the world. His summary was to eschew debt in cases where it was not creating wealth and to value people before all things material, as people are the only true value. He was thanked by Peter Tudisco for his clear insight and commitment to Christian values.

Gary Hapke spoke recently at the Rotary Club of Cambridge (G). He has had a varied career, from designing mainframe computer systems for Clarica, to selling life insurance. He was given the task of enhancing communication between managers and agents at Clarica. In the late 1990s he initiated the Bottom Line Resource Group, which is aimed at strengthening the image, clarifying the focus, and implementing fresh exposure to make companies and their products stand out. John says he often goes to bed with a problem and wakes up with a solution. He likes to think outside the box. He starts with identifying the dreams and passions of his clients, and believes that following "a proven formula" for success is not necessarily the best move for everyone. Real change comes from a desire to improve and by identifying your strengths and motivations. John’s job is to facilitate this change.

And at the Rotary Club of Cambridge (Sunrise) Larry Hardman had the pleasure of introducing his brother Al as the guest speaker. He was born in Hamilton and graduated from Michigan Tech University in Houghton with a civil engineering degree. He is currently the CEO of Hardman Construction Inc. in Ludington, Mich., a company he started in 1979. Al is a member of the Lions Club and past president of the Michigan Road Builders Association.
He is married with five children and eight grandchildren.

Al's passion for the outdoors led him to become involved in dog sled racing for over ten years now. He has trained and raced Alaskan sled dogs and completed races in Ontario, Michigan, Minnesota and Wyoming. He is a three-time finisher of the Iditarod, completing it in 1997, 2000 and in 2002 where he placed 21st out of 64, completing the race in 10 days.

The Last Great Race, the affectionate name for the Iditarod, is a 1,100-dog sled race in Alaska, running from Anchorage to Nome. The race starts with a maximum of 16 dogs per competitor and drops to less than half that number by the end of the race. The dogs undergo a rigorous 2,500-mile training in the fall before the race which starts on the first Saturday in March.

In a letter sent to us asking if we would report on Al's speech to the Rotarians, Al's brother Larry also pointed out that in two Iditarod races, Al accepted pledges for the Leader Dog School for the Blind.

Thanks again for the many clubs and associations that supply such interesting service club column material and thanks to all our readers that are interested in the many selfless, dedicated community servants in Cambridge.

Decision of Interest Justice Salerno

IA PART 11

High v. Reuters America Inc. - Plaintiff commenced this action to recover damages for lost wages, retirement earnings and consequential damages stemming from defendants terminating plaintiff's employment. The complaint charges defendants with unlawful disability discrimination and retaliation in violation of Executive Law &sect;290 et seq., New York City Human Rights Law and New York City Administrative Code &sect;8-101.

Defendants' motion is to compel plaintiff to respond to the comprehensive document demand addressed to plaintiff's prior employment history dating back to 1997 when plaintiff was employed by St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital and Swiss Reinsurance. As alternative relief, defendants seek the Court's intervention to require plaintiff to provide authorizations to enable defendants to obtain plaintiff's prior employment records.

Defendants' document request is grounded on the after acquired evidence doctrine. After acquired evidence relates to evidence of misconduct acquired by the employer after the employee is discharged and uncovered during the discovery phase of the lawsuit brought by the employee for unlawful termination. Here, defendants contend that plaintiff's prior employment records will provide relevant information concerning plaintiff's work performance at St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital and Swiss Reinsurance including plaintiff's medical history during her prior employment. The complaint alleged that plaintiff sustained a disabling back injury described as lumbosacral radiculopathy which occurred during her employment with defendant RAM.

The alleged cause of plaintiff's termination, asserted by RAM, was plaintiff's inadequate performance including chronic tardiness. Defendant RAM therefore argues that the information demanded is material and necessary to demonstrate that plaintiff's representations regarding her prior employment made at her interview and resume history including her physical condition were not accurate. Prior to filing this motion, defendants and plaintiff entered into a confidentiality agreement that was converted into an order by the Court on December 13, 2002. In sum, defendants want to ascertain whether plaintiff's alleged unsatisfactory work performance predated her employment with defendants and defendants want to compare plaintiff's prior employment records with representations plaintiff made concerning her former employment.

Defendants cite Vichare v. Amba, [106 F.3D 457 [2d. Cir 1996]], where a discharged employee sued his former employer claiming race and national origin discrimination in violation of Title V11 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The Court affirmed, inter alia, the order issued by the District Court which permitted plaintiff's employer to use after acquired evidence of the employee's misconduct to impeach the employee's credibility. The Court holding in Vichare, relied upon the decision of the Supreme Court in McKennon v. Nashville Banner Publishing Co., [513 U.S. 352, 115 S. Ct. 879 [1995]].

In McKennon, the employee sued under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act [ADEA]. Judge Kennedy, who delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court, observed that the Court is presented with the "express assumption that an unlawful motive was the sole basis for the firing" [at p. 359] of McKennon, "but the employees misconduct was not discovered until after the employer fired McKennon." The Supreme Court nevertheless clearly decided that after acquired evidence may be introduced by the employer. "Once an employer learns about employee wrongdoing that would lead to a legitimate discharge, we cannot require the employer to ignore the information, even if it is acquired during the course of discovery in a suit against the employer and even if the information might have gone undiscovered absent the suit" [p. 362].

The Court concluded that although evidence of the employee's conduct may not provide a bar to recovery but may render the employee ineligible for front-pay and rein-statement and limit back pay to the period between the unlawful termination and the date on which the discovery was made, and although "McKennon involved a claim under ADEA its rationale is applicable to Title V11" [citation omitted].

Prior to the McKennon decision, Federal Courts did not fashion a consistent response to the employer's defense of after acquired evidence [see, Mulligan-Jensen v. Michigan Technological Univ., 975 F.2d 302, 304, 6th Cir. 199, cert granted, 113 S. Ct. 2991 and cert dismissed, 114 S.Ct. 22 [1993]; Wallace v. Dunn Constr. Co., 968 F.2d 1174, 1178 [11th Cir. 1992]; Petition for en banc rehearing granted; 32 F. 3d 1489; 62 F.3d 374 holding that the decision on after acquired evidence in McKennon applied to cases under Title V11; Moodie v. Federal Reserve Book, No. 91 CIV 6629 [Mel], 1993 WL 370582].

Consequently, after McKennon several cases initiated in Federal Courts and in the State of New York permitted the introduction and use of after acquired evidence where the employee charged the employer with discriminating practices [see, Carrall v. Bayerische Landesbank, 150 F. Supp 2d 531; Rogers v. Lenox Hill Hospital, 239 A.D.2d 140, 1ST Dept., 657 N.Y.S.2d 616; McCarthy v. Pall Corporation, 214 A.D.2d 705; 209 A.D.2d 332; Dunlap v. United Health Services, 189 A.D.2d 1073; Hutchison v. Washburn, 80 A.D.2d 367].

As early as 1903, the Courts of this state have recognized that an employer may defend a wrongful discharge claim if "good reason for the discharge, although it was then unknown to the employer..." [see, Hutchison v. Washburn, supra]. However, the misrepresentation or misconduct must be sufficiently grievous and significant enough to violate the contract of service [see, Turner v. Kouwenhouwen, 100 N.Y. 115]. Whether plaintiff's conduct, in the case at bar, reaches the level that would justify her discharge cannot be determined at this stage of the litigation but in any event the admissibility of after acquired evidence is a matter best reserved for the Trial Court.

In Allen v. Crowell-Collier Publishing Company [21 N.Y.2d 403, 288 N.Y.S.2d 449], the Court of Appeals was called upon to examine the legislative intent when CPLR 3101 subd [a] was adopted. The precise language set forth in CPLR 3101 entitled "Scope of Disclosure" states in a short and unequivocal sentence:

"There shall be full disclosure of all evidence material and necessary in the prosecution of defense of an action....".

Too often, this Court has observed that in the heat of battle, advocates lose sight of the legislator's intent in passing CPLR 3101. The Court of Appeals in Allen, at page 452, said "The words, 'material and necessary are, in our view, to be interpreted liberally to require disclosure upon request, of any facts bearing on the controversy which will assist preparation for trial by sharpening the issues and reducing delay and prolixity."

In McCarthy v. Pall Corporation [214 A.D.2d 705, 625 N.Y.S.2d 296], plaintiff, a former employee, commenced an action to recover damages for sexual harassment and wrongful termination. The Court held that after acquired evidence regarding the employee's fraud is relevant to a determination of damages and "what other remedies to impose, if and when a violation by the employer is found" [citing McKennon v. Nashville Banner Pub. Co.; supra]. After acquired evidence was permitted in Reinach v. Wisehart [209 A.D.2d 332, 619 N.Y.S.2d 14], although evidence of plaintiff's resume fraud did not entitle defendant to a judgment dismissing plaintiff's complaint which charged the defendant with terminating plaintiff's employment because of Sabbath observance. The issue regarding whether inaccurate information or statements contained in the employee's resume constitutes fraud justifying termination of the employee was explored by Judge Lasker in Moodie v. Federal Reserve Bank of New York [831 F. Supp. 333 [USDC 1993]]. Moodie brought a lawsuit against his former employer for discrimination based on race. Judge Lasker's well-reasoned opinion reviewed the use of after acquired evidence of employee conduct as a defense in employment discrimination cases and concluded that:
“even if Moodie should ultimately be found to have committed resume fraud in applying for his job with the Bank, that finding will not bar Moodie from pressing his claim of discriminating discharge, but it presumably would effect the determination of what damages, if any, Moodie is, entitled to if he prevails on his claim of discrimination” [at page 336].

Defendants' document demand set forth in a condensed version in defendants' counsels reply affidavit [Seltzer aff'd § 3] is as follows:

[a] resumes or applications for employment submitted or filled out by plaintiff;

[b] any forms completed either by plaintiff or regarding plaintiffs employment;

[c] performance appraisals or documents reflecting any oral or written discipline of plaintiff and/or positions she held while in the employ of Swiss Reinsurance America Corporation;

[d] documents or records reflecting any reason[s] for cessation of plaintiffs employment;

[e] documents relating to any compensation paid to plaintiff [including benefits] in connection with her employment;

[f] any other documents reflecting plaintiffs employment history; and

[g] any documents reflecting any medical or personal leaves of absence and/or claims for disability or Workers' Compensation benefits.

RAM concedes that its answer does not set forth in affirmative defense regarding plaintiffs alleged pre-employment wrongdoing. Plaintiff maintains that defendants' failure to assert after acquired evidence as an affirmative defense constituted a waiver of defendants' right to request evidence relating to plaintiffs pre-employment performance.

CPLR 3018[b] sets forth two alternative definitions of an affirmative defense: [1] any matter which if not pleaded would be likely to take the adverse party by surprise or [2] any matter which raises fact issues not appearing on the face of a prior pleading. Here, plaintiffs complaint states an appropriate claim based upon defendants' conduct which plaintiff alleges constitutes a discriminating practice both under Federal and State Law. Defendants' discovery request potentially raises matters which, if not pleaded would take the plaintiff by surprise and although the potential defense would not constitute an absolute bar to plaintiffs recovery [see, McKennon v. Nashville Banner Pub. Co., supra; McCarthy v. Pall Corporation, 214 A.D.2d 705, 625 N.Y.S.2d 296], nevertheless, evidence of plaintiffs misconduct developed during the discovery phase should be pleaded as an affirmative defense because the after acquired evidence relating to plaintiffs misconduct would limit defendants' potential damages. Pursuant to CPLR 3025[b], "leave to amend a pleading is freely granted as a matter of discretion in the absence of prejudice or surprise" [see, Stroock, Stroock & Lavan v. Beltramini, 157 A.D.2d 590, 591, 550 N.Y.S.2d 237[citing Loomes v. Civetta Corinno Constr. Corp., 54 N.Y.2d 18]]. Moreover, "every pleading question should be approached in the light of the Civil Practice Law and Rules enactment that pleadings shall be liberally construed" [see, Foley v. D'agostino, 21A.D.2d 60, 65, 248 N.Y.S.2d 121]. Thus, if evidence is found regarding plaintiffs conduct, defendants should move expeditiously to amend its answers and plead an affirmative defense.

Consequently, defendants' motion is granted and plaintiff shall provide defendants with appropriate authorizations directed to St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital Center and Swiss Reinsurance America Corporation permitting the release of information relating to plaintiffs employment records within twenty [20] days after service of a copy of this decision with Notice of Entry.

This constitutes the decision and order of this Court.
New rules fail to badger Concrete Canoe Competition winners

The national title at the 16th Annual ASCE/MBT National Concrete Canoe Competition was seized by the University of Wisconsin - Madison, culminating an event with new mix design and finishing requirements, judging criteria and sponsorship. The winning team's canoe, Chequamegon pronounced Shwa-Me-Gun, outperformed entries from 23 other universities and colleges in design, construction and navigability.

Hosted by Drexel University in Philadelphia, the June 20-22 competition was cosponsored by Monroe, Ohio-based Baker Concrete Construction, the Houston-based headquarters of Mexico's Cemex, Cleveland-based Master Builders, Inc., and Tarmac of Deerfield Beach, Fla. Teams qualified for the national competition by winning one of 20 regional competitions held throughout the U.S. in the spring of the year, or by invitation as an international entry from organizer American Society of Civil Engineers ASCE. The top three teams shared $9,000 in scholarship prizes awarded by the sponsors.

New rules reflected an emphasis on environmental awareness and mix design. This year, students were required to use ordinary sand as 15 percent of their aggregate mixture and recycled coal fly ash as 20 percent of the binding material. Yielding heavier canoes, these modifications reversed a 15-year trend towards lighter, sleeker vessels. The average weight for canoes competing in this year's competition was 160 lb., up from a 117-lb. average in 2001. North Carolina State University entered the lightest canoe at 80 lbs., while the University of Maryland and Michigan Technological University sported the heaviest entries, each at 230 lb.

Further changes to the competition rules were also implemented, as follows:

The canoes could be stained, but not painted. Students were thereby challenged to produce attractive boats on the basis of quality concrete rather than a paint finish.

The design paper was to be structured more like a true engineering report, including analysis of the process leading to the final design and construction of the canoe as well as a description of project management, plus engineering drawings with a bill of materials.

The final product score was calculated by multiplying the aesthetics rating by a durability score. The aesthetics rating was left to the eye of the beholder, allowing judges to use any criteria to determine what makes the canoe attractive. Students also rated each other's canoes for aesthetics, and the average student score was assigned the full weight of a single judge's score. The durability score was less subjective as a table was created to guide judges on exactly how to assign the proper value.

In scoring, the relative weights assigned to each of four general criteria de-emphasized racing in favor of mix design and construction. In the past, the design paper, the business presentation and the final product were each worth 20 percent of the overall score, with 40 percent allocated to racing events. For this year's competition, slalom/ endurance and sprint races accounted for only 30 percent of the total score, with the remaining 70 percent based on a design paper 30 percent; an oral business presentation detailing the canoe's design, construction and materials 25 percent; and, the end product 15 percent.

Points were earned for structural integrity of the finished craft as well as a cross section detailing construction materials and methods. In addition, the canoes were required to pass a flotation test demonstrating buoyancy upon submergence. Overall, students were challenged to design and construct a concrete canoe demonstrating the right balance of conflicting characteristics for optimum speed, maneuverability, strength and stability.

Yet, the races proved to be the most dramatic of any in the event's history when the original race site on the Schuylkill River was flooded due to intense rainfall during the first two days of the competition. Just 24 hours before the races were to begin, fast currents and high water on the Schuylkill River destroyed docks and flooded spectator areas at the original race site in Fairmount Park. The races were salvaged when local park and planning officials of the City of Brotherly Love granted use of the lake at Franklin D. Roosevelt Park. In the end, the 145-lb., 22-ft. Chequamegon's winning team earned $5,000 in scholarship money for its effort and ingenuity.

The team's closest competitors were Université Laval of Quebec, an invited international guest, and University of California at Berkeley $2,500 scholarship. Finishing third, Berkeley's 160-lb. Bearkelium was cast with an innovative technique called sheetcrete, which involves rolling concrete into %-in. sheets, transferring them to the form and vibrating the joints together. After winning three of the last four national titles, long-standing National Concrete Canoe Competition champion Clemson University $1,500 came in fourth place with its 176-lb., 21-ft.-long Main Course.
Future processing technologies

In mid-March, the US Department of Energy (DOE) announced results of the Mining Industry of the Future (MIF) Round Four solicitation, which was directed at processing technologies, part of the 'Mineral Processing Technology Roadmap'. The awards are worth $3 million over the life of five projects. With industry cost sharing (at 50-50 or greater), the projects will be worth over $7.6 million.

Michigan Technological University of Houghton will lead a dozen industrial partners, including Cleveland Cliffs and Phelps Dodge, in developing a Total Ore Processing Integration and Management System (TOPIMS). This process will allow mine and mill personnel to respond rapidly to upstream and downstream changes to optimise the entire mineral processing stream, the aim being to reduce mill and mine energy use by 10%. DOE will contribute $622,651 of the projected $2,602,876 total cost of the three-year project.

In the Optimised Charge Motion and Slurry Flow in Plant-Scale SAG Mills project, the University of Utah in Salt Lake City, in collaboration with Kennecott Utah Copper and Cortez Gold Mines, will develop a pilot SAG grinding facility that uses highly durable ceramic as opposed to steel balls on copper ores, with sensors to reduce energy use by 15-20%. DOE will contribute $383,480 of the $913,480 total project cost over two years.

Finally, the In-Plant Testing of High-Efficiency Hydraulic Separators project will be led by the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University (VPI) in Blacksburg. It will test and analyse hydraulic separators, research ways to improve the efficiency of the separators, and develop next generation, high-efficiency separators. Of a total expected cost of $700,821, DOE will contribute $345,800 over three years.

The Advanced Surface-Enhancement Technology for Decreasing Wear and Corrosion project will be led by the University of Kentucky in Lexington, and involves Consol Energy, Phelps Dodge, AMVEST Mineral Services and several other companies and organisations. They will develop an advanced high-density infrared (HDI)-based surface enhancement technology that will decrease the wear and corrosion rates of mineral processing equipment by an order of magnitude. DOE will contribute $1,250,671 of the project cost of $2,511,329.

CQ Inc will lead the project on Improved Energy Recovery and Reduced Coal-Processing Wastes, implementing the GranuFlowT technology. By adding a binding agent into the process, mills can improve the physical characteristics of the coal to create a more acceptable fuel, improve processing efficiency, and reduce environmental impact. DOE will contribute $468,304 of the $936,608 total project costs over two years.
